"I have looked on Life: I have looked on Death. I have pitied, I have sorrowed, I have smiled. Yet I have no lore save that which was learned from flowers and little children, from loving all God's creatures, and from seeing, in my visions, the Sorrowful Face."

VISIONS BY COULSON KERNAHAN

Deeper questions of life and death, and of God's relationship to man, are explored in this collection of "dreams" by a noted English novelist and literary critic. A man takes an uncertain step into the next world as his life ends – Defendants at the Last Judgment hurl their own accusations at the Judge – An angel arrives on Christmas night to guide one soul through a night of despair and doubt – Flowers in a garden contemplate their own mortality – What would it mean if the world renounced Christ, or God took Christ away from the world? – And in a world of the future, pleasure and luxury are pursued ... and children are nowhere to be found.
